DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1, 2, 4-6, 8-13 and 16-20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Baur et al. (US 2003/0137279). The reference discloses a method and apparatus for slowing down the discharge of a battery having, inter alia, a battery 3, a monitoring unit 9, a switch 8 for coupling the battery to the load and further coupling to the status signal to indicate whether the load is in an active or inactive mode. The battery is cut-off from all processes whenever the load is in an inactive mode. See main figure.

It is however does not describe the load being a communication probe rather it is described only as a generic load. It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art to have substituted the generic load with the claimed communication probe since it has been held that a recitation with respect to the manner in which a claimed apparatus is intended to be employed does not differentiate the claimed apparatus from a prior art apparatus satisfying the claimed structural limitations. Basically the crux of the invention lies on the functionality of the battery saver circuit rather than on the details of the communication probe.

It is further fails to disclose the aspect of charging of the batteries. It is a common knowledge in the art that batteries need recharging and the simplest technique of recharging the batteries is to plug the charger into an ac outlet. Therefore it would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art to have recharged the battery through an ac outlet.

It is further fails to disclose whether the battery is a lithium battery or a disposable battery. It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to select any appropriate battery for the application-at-hand, since it has been held to be within the general skill of a worker in the art to select a known material on the basis of its suitability for the intended use as a matter of obvious design choice.

Allowable Subject Matter

Claims 3, 14 and 15 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

Response to Arguments

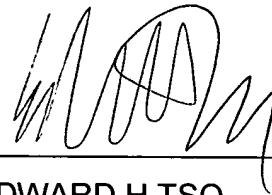

Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 1-6 and 8-20 have been considered but are moot in view of the new grounds of rejection.
